The first Historically Black College and University (HBCU) was founded in 1837 in Pennsylvania with the purpose of providing Black youth an education. The African American population was prevented from attending established colleges and universities due to racial discrimination and segregation in the United States. The U.S. Department of Education defines an HBCU as any historically Black college or university that was established prior to 1964. HBCUs thrived in educating Black Americans and to this day continue providing outstanding educations to all. Although HBCUs were originally founded to educate Black Americans, today 1 in 4 students (24%) enrolled at HBCUs are non-Black.

The U.S. has 100 HBCUs with 51 of them being public institutions and 49 being private.

HBCUs offer an inclusive environment to study. HBCUs are becoming a magnet for international students because they offer strong academic programs, affordability, and diversity for international students. Many notable African Americans have attended HBCUs, including Vice President Kamala Harris (Howard University), Oprah Winfrey (Tennessee State University), Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. (Morehouse College), and more.
HBCUs are accredited institutions, with a variety of public, private, and liberal arts schools. HBCUs have the most diverse faculties in the country. The tuition costs are half of a majority of institutions, making it affordable for students.

HBCUs are degree-granting schools for associate’s, bachelor’s, master’s, and doctoral programs in a variety of fields in the sciences, arts, law, business, and more. HBCUs have an ethos of collective learning and have an institutional responsibility for ensuring student success.

International students of all races and ethnic backgrounds are able to attend HBCUs. International students attending HBCUs is rapidly increasing in more than 20 states. HBCUs are known for their close-knit environment, smaller classes, and extensive student support systems.

The White House and the U.S. Department of State have made a commitment to support and further engage with HBCUs. We seek to provide students of diverse backgrounds with an opportunity to have a more equitable education.
